Investigating new approaches to racial healing

January 16, 2024

Kevin Leacock, MPH
Program manager
Community Innovations for Racial Equity
Build Healthy Places Network

Kevin Leacock is the program manager of the Community Innovations for Racial Equity (CIRE) initiative at the Build Healthy Places Network (BHPN). He works to support the coordination of technical assistance and capacity building for 10 national BIPOC*-led organizations focused on identifying community ownership models and other approaches that prioritize community voice and vision. Kevin is responsible for leading the creation of tools/resources and developing/identifying strategies to engage multisector partners for leveraging connections within healthcare, community development and housing. Recently, he helped co-lead the development of BHPN's REPAIR Framework for Community-Institution Solidarity in Racial Healing, which aims to lift up racial healing as an actionable approach to shift power and center a community vision for health and equity. Kevin holds a master's degree in public health from Drexel University.
